C) Randy's Work

- 1) I had a query from David, a WikiTree contributor, asking "Is it still possible to locate the Martin Carringer farm?" I wrote "Rabbit Holes With Randy Where Was the Martin Carringer (1758-1835) Farm?" in response. Martin Carringer (1758-1835), a Revolutionary War soldier, is one of my 4th great-grandfathers, who settled in Perry Township, Mercer County, Pennsylvania in about 1796. I had a Donation Land map from about 1820, county plat maps from 1860 and 1873 that show the probable location of the farm. Using Martin's will and my extensive family tree database, I was able to identify the Carringer names on the plat maps. The maps in the blog post are from published books. The 1873 plat map is in the Ancestry collection of "U.S. Indexed County Land Ownership Maps, 1860-1918."
- 2) Almost all of my important paper files have been digitized and organized. I spent a fair amount of time one week in September on my genealogy digital file maintenance and wrote about it in "Rabbit Holes With Randy Genealogy File Maintenance." I have most of my ancestral family files stored in "surname > family folders" and try to use a standard file naming scheme. I have separate folders for documents, photographs, and reports (e.g., book pages, periodical pages, web pages, etc.) in the "surname > family file" folders. When I've collected a general set of records for a surname, I put them in the Surname file folder (e.g. Seaver > Seaver Obituaries).
- 3) My genealogy blog is at https://www.geneamusings.com. I write a weekly blog for "Best of the Genea-Blogs" where I choose, and link to, the "best" (IMHO) genealogy-related blog posts for the previous week. The most recent one is at https://w*/.geneamusings.com/2022/10/best-of-genea-blogs-2-to-8-october-2022.html.
